Education: A Case Study

Abstract: This study explores the experiences of an individual with Autism Spectrum Disorder (ASD) in higher education, focusing on the role of a security teddy bear as a source of comfort and reassurance during periods of isolation and social challenges. The study highlights the importance of ownership and the impact of social interactions on emotional well-being.

Keywords: Autism Spectrum Disorder, Security, Comfort, Reassurance, Isolation, Social Interaction, Ownership, Emotional Well-being.

Introduction: Higher education is a challenging environment for individuals with ASD, often characterized by social isolation and sensory sensitivities. This study aims to understand how a security teddy bear can provide a sense of safety and support in such environments.

Methodology: The study uses a qualitative approach, involving interviews and observations of the participant's interactions with the teddy bear and their social environment.

Results: The findings indicate that the teddy bear significantly reduces anxiety and provides a sense of security, particularly during periods of social isolation. Ownership of the bear is linked to increased emotional stability and confidence in social settings.
